

Conservation of migratory waterbirds and their habitats in the East Asian – Australasian Flyway

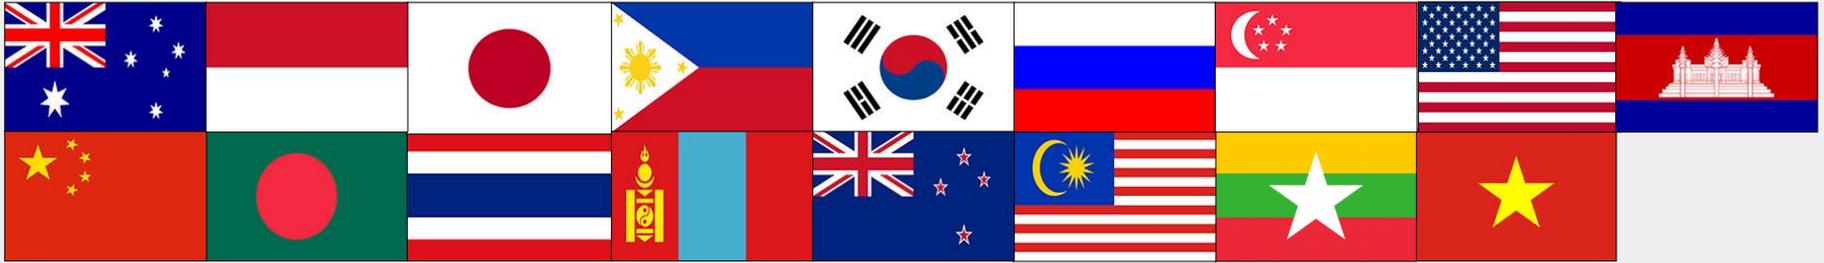

Spike Millington, Chief Executive

PARTNERSHIP for the EAST ASIAN-AUSTRALASIAN FLYWAY

EAAFP Partners (35)

Governments

Intergovernmental organizations

International NGO

Flyway Site Network

Network Sites
(124 sites)

Important Sites
(Approx. 900 sites)

PARTNERSHIP for the EAST ASIAN-AUSTRALASIAN FLYWAY

Site Manager Workshops

- International and national
- Supported by EAAFP and Ramsar Regional Center – East Asia
- Share experiences
- Training in monitoring, CEPA, ecosystem service valuation, etc
- Adding information on sites

Korean National Site Manager Training Workshop for Flyway and Ramsar

15-16 May 2015, Seosan, Republic of Korea

Korean National Site Manager Training Workshop for Flyway and Ramsar

15-16 May 2015, Seosan, Republic of Korea

Asian Site Manager Training Workshop for Flyway and Ramsar

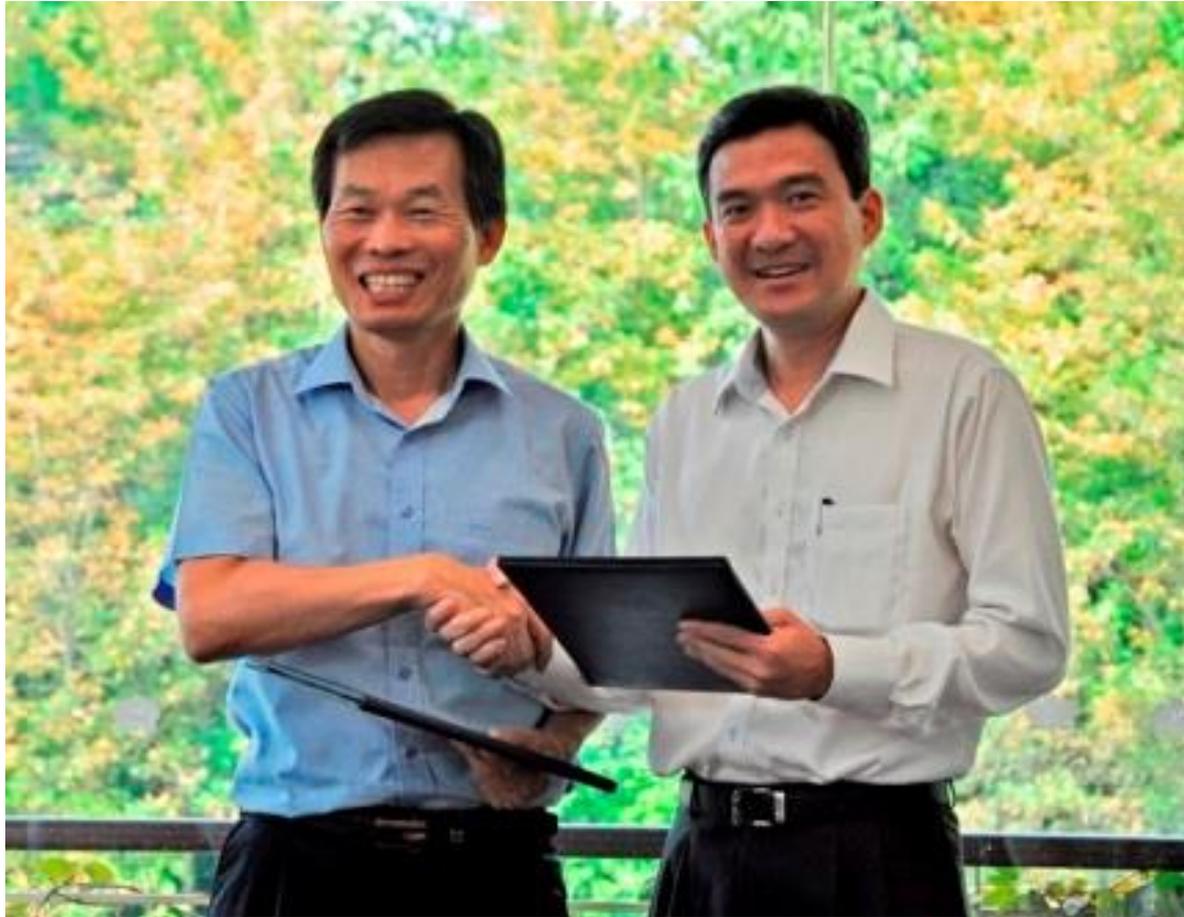

25 - 29 August 2014, Jakarta, Indonesia

Sister Sites for EAAF

The Flyway Site Network not only identifies and includes sites of international importance for migratory waterbirds to promote improved protection and management, but also aims to link those sites through sharing information and capacity building.

1. Yalujiang National Nature Reserve (China) & Firth of Thames (New Zealand), 2004
2. Junam Reservoir (RoKorea) & Kejo-numa (Japan), 2009
3. Zhalong National Nature Reserve (China) & Janghang Wetland Protected area (RoKorea)
4. Moreton Bay, Boondall Wetlands (Australia) & Yatsu-higata (Japan), 1998
5. Kushiro area (Japan) & Hunter River Estuary Wetlands (Australia), 1994
6. Suncheon Bay (RoKorea) & Izumi (Japan), 2009
7. Fujimae Tidal Flat (Japan) & Swan Bay Tidal Flats (Australia), 2007
8. Yubudo Tidal Flat (RoKorea) & Sungei Buloh Wetland Reserve (Singapore), 2012

Yubudo Tidal Flat (RoKorea) & Sungei Buloh Wetland Reserve (Singapore)

Singapore Students visiting Geum Estuary, Seocheon (RoKorea)

MOA Signing between China and New Zealand

MOA Signing between China and New Zealand

MOA Signing between China and New Zealand

